1. Overview

The history of the Native Americans and the American West has long fascinated people of all ages – from the romantic view of the Indian and tribal life to the dusty and bandana-wearing image of the cowboy that has been portrayed in literature and the media. In this option, students will have the opportunity to explore what the 'real' American West was like and examine the impact of government-sponsored expansion in the American outback, which had far-reaching consequences for both the Indians and the many settlers of the time.

This was a defining period in the history of the USA, as a huge number of people moved west to settle on the Plains and the frontier of settlement was pushed westwards – driven by the belief in Manifest Destiny to expand the United States from coast to coast. The lives of the Plains Indians changed dramatically over these 60 years, as railroads, the cattle industry and gold prospecting impacted on their previous ways of life and means of survival, and they were moved into reservations.

To aid this story of the American West, the unit has been divided into three sequential Key topics that help tell this fascinating and interesting story. Firstly, students look at the lives of the Plains Indians, early migration and settlement and problems of lawlessness in early settlements, as well as the tensions between the settlers and Plains Indians. They then move on to how settlement on the Plains developed, ranching and the cattle industry, and the impact on the Plains Indians' lives of events and developments between c1862 and c1876. Finally, students look at further changes in farming, the cattle industry and settlement, conflict and tension between different groups living on the Plains, and the destruction of the Plains Indians' way of life. All three Key topics are interconnected, however, with threads of settlement, conflict and tensions, and the changing lives of the Plains Indians running throughout. Consequently, students should be encouraged to see the period study as a whole rather than three separate topics.

1.1 Assessment

Students answer three compulsory questions for the period study.

- Question 1: focuses on consequence.
- Question 2: focuses on analytical narrative, in which students write an account that not only describes what happened, but also involves analysis to find connections and make sense of events and their impact to explain why events unfolded in the way that they did. This is likely to involve a mix of second-order concepts (i.e. causation, consequence, change).
- Question 3: students select two from a choice of three parts. Each focuses on the importance of an event/person/development in terms of what difference they made in relation to specified situations and unfolding developments (i.e. their consequence and significance).

Detailed information and guidance on assessment can be found in the separate Getting Started Guide.

2.1 Summary of content

The early settlement of the West, c1835–c1862

The first topic covers the early settlement of the West, c1835–c1862. Students should be aware that the Plains Indians were many different tribes and nations such as the Sioux. They should understand that life on the Plains could be difficult and be aware of the Plains Indians' means of survival. Students should be aware of the main beliefs of the Plains Indians about land, nature, warfare and personal property, and that these differed greatly from those of the Americans who were starting to settle on the Plains.

Students should understand that the government supported westward expansion and, while they allowed the Plains Indians to live on the Plains, by 1840 this was only to the west of the Permanent Indian Frontier, and in 1851 the Indian Appropriations Act created reservations, diminishing the Plains Indians' independence. Students should appreciate the range of factors that encouraged migration west, both those pushing people from the east, such as the economic conditions, and those drawing people to the West, such as the discovery of gold, as well as the belief that it was their right to seek out and claim free land for themselves and the creation of trails that showed the way for the new settlers. Students should appreciate, however, that migration west was not easy, as exemplified by the disastrous experience of the Donner Party and the more successful Mormon migration. They should understand the nature of the early settlements and the conditions that made farming difficult.

Students should consider how the growing number of settlers moving on to the Plains led to conflict between settlers and Plains Indians. They should examine the significance of the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1851 and the promises made on both sides, including the lands given to the Plains Indians supposedly for all time. Students should understand why law and order was difficult to enforce in the early towns and settlements, and how the government and local communities tried to tackle these problems.

Development of the plains, c1862–c1876

Key topic 2 covers the development of the plains, c1862–c1876. Students do not need to know the events of the Civil War itself, but should understand that its ending brought a new wave of settlers arriving on to the Plains, helped by government incentives such as the Homestead Act and the Pacific Railroad Act and the building of the First Transcontinental Railroad. Students should be aware that, despite the government incentives to move to the West, homesteaders faced a range of difficulties in living on and farming the land, such as the lack of water, and the solutions that were found to deal with them, such as wind pumps. They should appreciate that the growing population in the West saw continued problems with law and order, despite government support, and they should understand the roles of law officers such as sheriffs. Students should be aware that as well as the increasing number of settlers at this time, the cattle industry was growing too, helped by factors including the railroads, individuals such as Goodnight and McCoy and cowtowns such as Abilene. They should be aware too of the move towards ranching started by Iliff and the resulting changes to the work of the cowboys.

Students should appreciate that tensions continued to grow between the settlers and the Plains Indians, but also between the settlers themselves such as the ranchers and the homesteaders. The expansion of the railroad, the growing cattle industry and gold prospecting all antagonised the Plains Indians. Students should be aware that despite this, the government still pursued a policy of encouraging the Plains Indians on to the reservations. They should understand that the 'Peace

2. Content guidance

Policy' pursued by President Grant in 1868 was short-lived, with continued tensions between the US Government and the Plains Indians which spilt into open conflict between the two parties. Students should study the key developments in the conflict during this period (Little Crow's War, the Stand Creek Massacre, Red Cloud's War, the Fort Laramie Treaty).

Conflicts and conquest, c1876–c1895

The third key topic covers conflicts and conquest, c1876–c1895. Students should understand that changes in farming in this period, as a result of new inventions such as barbed wire and new technology such as dry farming, meant that most of the early problems the homesteaders had faced were now solved. They should understand too that this period saw the end of the 'open range', leading to the formation of new ranches, fenced with the new barbed wire. Students should be aware that the effects of the Civil War were still being felt, with the Exoduster movement from the South, and they should be aware too of the significance of the Oklahoma Land Rush, which opened up to settlers land that had previously been promised to the Cherokee Indians. They should understand the additional tensions and challenges this growth in settlement brought to law and order, including the significance of the notorious Billy the Kid, as well as key law enforcers such as Wyatt Earp and events at OK Corral. They should be aware that, although law enforcement did not eradicate lawlessness, by the end of the period a reduction in lawlessness connected to the 'Wild West' was evident as settlements evolved into communities and communication over long distance improved. Students should understand the reasons for clashes between cattlemen and homesteaders in the range wars, including the key events of the Johnson County War of 1892.

Students should understand that the US Government and US Army were still engaged in conflict with the Plains Indians, reaching a climax with the Battle of the Little Bighorn and the Wounded Knee Massacre, which effectively ended Indian resistance on the Plains. Students should appreciate the effects of the destruction of the buffalo, on which the Plains Indians had been so reliant, and the resulting changes that the Plains Indians faced in life on the reservations. They should be aware that this was against a backdrop of changing government attitudes, which had once sought to accommodate the Plains Indians but now wanted to remove them from the Plains altogether, and that this was reflected in government policy and measures such as the Dawes Act in 1887, and the closure of the Indian Frontier.

Period studies focus on an analytical narrative of events and therefore students should appreciate the chronology of key events, while understanding that some developments overlap several events. For example, separate waves of migration feature at several points in the narrative.

Within that analytical narrative, students will need to see that events do not occur in isolation but unfold as a consequence of what has gone before. For example, the events at the OK Corral were both a consequence of attempts to establish law enforcement in frontier towns and the lawlessness accompanying the westward migration.

When discussing the significance of an event, students should be able to explain its impact and the way it changed the situation or attitudes.

Key terms

It may be useful at the start of the course to provide students with a list of key terms and concepts that they will need to be familiar with for this option. Students should be familiar with the terminology found in the specification content.

The list of terms below is not intended to be a comprehensive checklist, rather simply a useful starting point for teachers to produce their own list of terms that their students may not fully understand or have difficulty spelling.

- Claim
- corral
- dry farming
- Exoduster
- federal
- frontier
- Ghost Dance
- homesteader
- lawlessness
- Manifest Destiny
- marshal
- nomadic
- open range
- railroad
- ranch
- range war
- reservation
- rustling
- sheriff
- vigilante

2.2 Content exemplification

This section provides additional guidance on the specification content. It should be remembered that the official specification is the only authoritative source of information and should always be referred to for definitive guidance. Any examples provided here do not constitute additional specification content and other relevant material illustrating aspects of the specification can be used.

4. Resources

The sections below list a range of resources that could be used by students and teachers for this topic.

The first section lists information on free support materials available on the Edexcel website. On the GCSE History \(9–1\) from 2016 page:

- select the Teaching support tab, where resources are separated out by Plan, Teach, and Track and Assess;
- or select the Course materials tab, and then select the appropriate tab for Specification and sample assessments, Exam materials, or Teaching and learning materials.

The second section lists publishers who have been endorsed for GCSE (9–1) History. Endorsement means that a resource has been through our quality assurance process to confirm that it meets the teaching and learning requirements a specification is aimed at. Endorsement of a resource doesn't mean it's the only suitable material available, or that it is required to achieve the qualification.

The remaining sections list both endorsed resources and those that have not been endorsed. While these resources – and others – may be used to support teaching and learning, the official specification and associated assessment guidance materials are the only authoritative source of information and should always be referred to for definitive guidance.

Links to third-party websites are controlled by others and are subject to change. There are plenty of useful videos for History students on online sharing platforms, and any links below have been checked, but please exercise care before sharing social media links with students.
